Battle with Scarcity Consciousness Won!

by Nannette Prohs

I just had an exhilarating battle with Scarcity Consciousness.

It felt so good to 'just say no' that if I smoked, I would want a cigarette.

A client of mine asked me to cut my earnings considerably for work I am doing for him. Being a friend of ten years, I was considering his offer. Yet the more I considered it, the worse I felt.

I called my husband to get his thoughts on the matter, and to make sure my impulse was not merely a reaction to an ego inflation.

Ed reminded me of my philosophy that if the 'vibe' is not right, it would not be good for my business or my general happiness.

I pondered this reminder as I drove home on the beautiful Las Vegas day. Then I called my friend and, with some difficulty, told him that I could not work that way.

Saying 'no' to a few thousand dollars now that would have hurt my good-energy vibe is an invaluable gift. I feel like one of the amazing cloud formations soaring over our snow capped mountain peaks. I know that this energy I feel will draw to me the proper clients who respect my professionalism. And it will draw to me ten times what I gave up. I also know that the opposite decision would have drained this energy away.

As I write this, the hummingbird that lives right outside flew within a half inch of my window and waved 'hello' for a few seconds. Wow ... agreement from the Universe !!! This is better than shopping. Better than the most expensive dinner in town. Better than chocolate. And more fulfilling than a dream vacation.

'Just say no' to the Scarcity Mindset. And give yourself the Delicious Gift of Prosperity Consciousness.
